

Colonel Henry Champion House — Historical Documentation

The Library of Congress has an extensive collection of historical documentation on the Colonel Henry Champion House, which is located on Westchester Road in Colchester, Connecticut. The materials are preserved under the Historic American Buildings Survey (HABS) collection (Survey number: HABS CT-143).

Documentation & Archival Materials

- 10 Historic Photographs: These feature high-quality black-and-white images captured by federal photographer Stanley P. Mixon on July 17, 1940. They include general exterior views from the northeast, close-ups of the architectural details, and interior shots of the living spaces and fireplaces.
- Architectural & Historical Data: Textual documentation regarding the construction, layout, and history of the 1790 Federal-style gambrel-roofed structure.

Historical Background

The house was built by Colonel Henry Champion, a prominent commissary leader who worked closely with George Washington and famously drove herds of cattle to feed starving troops at Valley Forge. He had the home built by noted architect William Sprat for his son, General Henry Champion.

Note for Webmaster: You can view and download the full public domain record and high-resolution images directly via the official Library of Congress catalog page.